Summary Outline of Communist Activity in Israel

Introduction. This paper is an attempt to summarize in outline and analytical form what we know about the Communist movement in Israel. The paper is intended for reference; it is not a study and it makes no interpretations and draws no conclusions save the judgments necessary to bring things together. [REDACTED]

~~SECRET//NOFORN//CONTINUED CONTROL~~

- e. Latvian Jews: Berl Balti (PCP).
- f. Rumanian Jews: Eliahu Druckman.
- g. Bulgarian Jews: Shlomo Salmi.

2. Instances of factionalism based on cultural differences.

- a. Emil Tuma and Salim Qasim favored Israeli adherence to the 1947 demarcation agreement whereas Mikunis and the Jewish element wanted mutual concessions on the frontier only (May 57).
- b. Emil Habibi and other MAKI Arab leaders attempted to set up a broadly based Arab Movement for National Liberation but this was squelched by the dominant Jewish faction of the party (Feb-Mar 58); presumably these objections were overcome later and an inaugural meeting of this Movement took place (Jul 58).
Note: Tubi more pro-Jewish than Habibi (as of May 58).
- c. The demotion of Shlomo Salmi, leader of the Bulgarian group in MAKI, from full to candidate membership in the Central Committee, was regarded by that group as discrimination on grounds of national origin (Jun 61).

3. Instances of factionalism based on ideological differences.

- a. Hanokh Bzhora group left MAKI in 1956, criticizing that party for its "Stalinism" (subservience to the USSR) and for its anti-Zionism. The group included Joseph Vogel, Yitshak Hasson, and Hagai Bets.
Note: "National Communism" came in for severe criticism at the 13th MAKI Congress of May-Jun 57.
- b. Some members of Moshe Sneh (former left Mapam) group resigned in 1958 over "neo-Stalinist" leadership and Nagy execution. The group included Moshe Levin, M. Zeinchnor, Dan Chahor, Rachel Chahor, Malhiel Mevah, Menahem Lodan, and Mathatiahon Mintz.
